Communities Concerned for Immigrants & Refugees

A Network for Learning & Action

Kansas City has launched a new learning network — Communities Concerned for Immigrants and Refugees — open to health, social services and other community members interested in strengthening the health and well-being of refugee and immigrant communities.

We will connect with our community through work that is done in schools, refugee resettlement agencies, migrant farmworker programs, health departments, clinics, hospitals and other community-based programs.

Our efforts are guided by a multi-disciplinary team of local leaders who have been guiding immigrant and refugee programs in the Greater Kansas City community since 2016.

We believe that meeting the needs of immigrant and refugee communities requires dynamic collaborations across service settings and disciplines – and that the time is right for this network to grow new ideas and solutions that work for our communities.

To that end we strive to become a recognized welcoming community for all who live in the Greater Kansas City area.
